NTS Map Sheet 82 J/14 – “Spray Lakes Reservoir”

Mount Bogart
(mountain)

Located at:
ATS: W31-22-9-W5 and SE36-22-10-W5
(50° 54' 41" N & 115° 14' 36" W)
Approximately 18 km SSE of Canmore town centre.
NOT
ATS: NE31, NW32-22-9-W5
(50° 55' 10" N & 115° 13' 31" W)

This 3,140 metre (10,300') mountain is named for Donaldson Bogart Dowling, who was a geologist with the Geological Survey of Canada. He was an assistant to George Mercer Dawson in the 1880s and worked with the survey until the 1920s. Employed as a topographer, he became known as geologist. He identified the resource potential of Manitoba's Flin-Flon district, but he is most known for his geological mapping of western Canada's coal deposits and his discovery of artesian water in southern Alberta. According to the 1928 Geographic Board of Canada publication Place Names of Alberta, the mountain was named in 1904. The name appears to have been approved for mapping purposes in late 1927 or early 1928. In 1954, the Army Survey Establishment produced the 1:50:000 Map Sheet for the region, the name was incorrectly applied to a mountain at 50° 55' 10" N & 115° 13' 31" W (approximately 1.5 km northeast of the actual location). All other official maps and sources continued to place the name on the mountain located at 50° 54' 41" N & 115° 14' 36" W. In 2006, the province rectified the error at the request of members of the public and the Geographical Names Board of Canada.

Grant MacEwan Peak
(peak)

Located at:
ATS: NE12-24-9-W5
(50° 01' 58" N & 115° 07' 17" W)
Approximately 4 km southeast of Exshaw

The name commemorates John Walter Grant MacEwan. Grant MacEwan was born in 1902 near Brandon, MB and grew up near Melfort, SK. He graduated from the Ontario Agricultural College in 1926 and received a BSA from the University of Toronto and a MS from Iowa State University. He was a professor of animal husbandry at the University of Saskatchewan and Dean of Agriculture at the University of Manitoba. A strong promoter of public education for farmers, he wrote four books and regular newspaper columns on agricultural sciences and animal husbandry, notably for the Western Producer newspaper. He retired from academia and moved to Calgary where he became actively involved in politics. He was a city alderman from 1953 to 1958 and represented Calgary as a Member of the Legislative Assembly from 1955 to 1959, serving as leader of the Alberta Liberal Party and leader of the Official Opposition in 1958 and 1959. Defeated in the 1959 election, he resigned the party leadership in 1960. He was re-elected to Calgary City Council, serving as alderman from 1959 to 1963 and as Mayor of Calgary from 1963 to 1965. In December 1965, he was appointed Lieutenant Governor of Alberta and was sworn into office in January 1966. He served two terms in that role, being reappointed in 1970 and retiring in 1974. In his retirement, Grant MacEwan lectured at Olds College and the University of Calgary. He continued to write natural history and agricultural science columns for newspapers and he wrote numerous books on Western Canadian and Alberta history. These books were extremely popular and introduced many people to Alberta's history. Grant MacEwan passed away in 2000 at 97 years of age.

APPROVED – ALTERED APPLICATION (CHANGE OF SPELLING)

NTS Map Sheet 83 N/09 – “Grouard”

Travers Creek (creek)

NOT

Traverse Creek (creek)

Located:

ATS: 19-74-15-W5 to NW24-75-15-W5

(55° 25' 28" N & 116° 18' 23" W to 55° 31' 01" W & 116° 11' 39" N)

Flows east into Lesser Slave Lake, approximately 3 km east of Grouard.

This name was recorded as both Travers Creek and Traverse Creek in the 1907 field notes of H. W. Selby, Dominion Land Survey. The name was adopted for mapping purposes as “Traverse Creek” on the assumption the creek was named for the surveying term “traverse,” which is used to describe the distance covered in a particular period of time. Field research in the late-1980s and early-2000s found that the local population maintained that the creek was named for the Travers family, who had been resident in the region prior to the arrival of Selby's surveying party. Further research found that the creek ran through land owned by Travers family and that on some pages of Selby's field notes, the final "e" in Traverse had been crossed out. Local residents requested that the spelling of the name be changed to "Travers" in honour of this prominent, early local family.

The Travers family was from Hertfordshire, England. In 1894, Oliver Travers arrived in Canada, settling temporarily in Manitoba. He was joined by his brother Sidney in 1896/7. The two brothers hired onto the Helpman O'Brien Party, an exploration expedition heading overland to the Klondike from Edmonton. The group disbanded at Peace River following severe hardships and the death of one of the expedition leaders. Sidney Travers opened a stopping house in Grouard and Oliver enlisted for service in the South African (Boer) War. Upon Oliver's return in 1905, the brothers established a freighting and ranching operation and were soon joined by additional members of the family (brothers Alfred, Charles, Frank and Frederick, and sister Ruth). With the start of the First World War, Oliver, Charles and Frank enlisted for service. Oliver and Charles served with the 49th Edmonton Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force (Loyal Edmonton Regiment). Charles survived the conflict. Oliver served as a Lieutenant and Quartermaster. He received the Military Cross for his actions at Courcellette and was killed in action at Passchendaele on October 29, 1917. Although the family remained prominent in the High Prairie/Grouard region following the war, they eventually all migrated out of the area.

Notice of Intent to Designate a Provincial Historic Resource (Historical Resources Act)

File: Des. 489

Notice is hereby given that sixty days from the date of service of this Notice and its publication in Alberta Gazette, the Minister of Culture intends to make an Order that the site known as the:

St. Luke's Anglican Church, together with the land legally described as:

Plan (K) Block fourteen (14) Lots nine (9) ten (10) and eleven (11) excepting thereout: part of each lot as described for street widening as shown on Road Plan 908MC and municipally located in Red Deer, Alberta be designated as a Provincial Historic Resource under section 20 of the Historical Resources Act, RSA 2000 cH-9.

The reasons for the designation are as follows: The heritage value of Red Deer's St. Luke's Anglican Church lies in its architectural significance as an excellent example of Gothic Revival style church construction. The use of sandstone also makes the church an excellent and rare example of stone church construction in Alberta.

The Parish of St. Luke's was formed in May 1893, but construction of a modest church did not begin until 1898. In 1899, the parish's new minister, Joshua Hinchliffe, proposed that the still incomplete building be abandoned and a substantial sandstone church be constructed. After the donation of three lots on the southeast corner of McLeod (54th) Street and Gaetz Avenue, construction began in the summer of 1899. In 1900, the chancel, sanctuary and a small nave were completed; the nave was extended in 1904 and again in 1906. Also in 1906, a choir vestry and tower were added, bringing construction to an end. The use of stone as a construction material is significant and unusual. Although stone was the preferred construction material for Anglican churches, wood, and later brick, were more frequently used in Alberta due to their being easier to work with and more readily available. Despite a local source of sandstone, quarrying and transportation difficulties resulted in construction delays and the resultant high construction costs put the parish in financial difficulties for many years.

St. Luke's is an excellent example of Gothic Revival church architecture on a relatively small scale. The Gothic Revival movement arose due to the influence of mid-nineteenth century theologians, notably the Oxford Tractarians and the Cambridge Ecclesiological Society, who believed that the Anglican Church had degenerated and needed to return to its theologically Catholic roots. The Ecclesiologists rejected the architecture of the Renaissance and the contemporary period as being pagan and advocated a return to the Decorated Gothic architecture of the medieval period, which they perceived as being a morally superior era. Ecclesiological theories had a profound impact on church design over the ensuing decades. Ideally, Gothic Revival churches were to be oriented along an east-west axis with the chancel on the eastern side. The chancel, which contained the sanctuary, was the main focus of the church and had to be clearly distinguishable from the nave. The use of stone was paramount and steeply-pitched, wooden roofs were preferred. A tower, if included, was to be at the west side of the building. Interior rafters were to be exposed and Gothic or pointed arches used liberally throughout. Colourful decorations and ornamentation could be lavish, but had to be highly symbolic and not just for the sake of beautification.

St. Luke's exhibits a number of Gothic Revival elements. While a relatively small church, the use of sandstone and the steeply-pitched roofs gives it a feeling of massive proportions. The church is oriented on an east-west axis with the chancel at the east end and a square, battlemented tower at the northwest corner. The chancel is clearly distinguishable by its smaller footprint and lower roofline, and on the inside by its arch and raised platform. Gothic-arched elements dominate the building, particularly the large stained glass windows on the west and east elevations, the main entryway in the tower's base and the louvred openings in its upper reaches. Rows of lancet windows, arranged in triplets of a tall window flanked by two shorter windows, line the north and south elevations. The interior features fir-clad walls and an exposed scissor-truss rafters. The layout of the nave and chancel also reflect Gothic Revival characteristics, including the bench-style pews off a central aisle, the placement of the lectern, altar, reredos, baptismal font and organ.

It is therefore considered that the preservation and protection of the resource is in the public interest.

Notice is hereby given that sixty days from the date of service of this Notice and its publication in Alberta Gazette, the Minister of Culture intends to make an Order that the site known as the:

Canadian Pacific Railway Section House, together with the land legally described as:

Plan 8149AH all that portion of Block (A) lying north west of Lot two (2) Plan 8123208, south east of Lot fourteen (14) Plan 7820055 and north east of a line joining the most southerly corner of said Lot fourteen (14) and the most westerly corner of said Lot two (2)

Excepting thereout all mines and minerals and municipally located at 5200 Railway Avenue in Coronation,, Alberta be designated as a Provincial Historic Resource under section 20 of the Historical Resources Act, RSA 2000 cH-9.

The reasons for the designation are as follows: The heritage value of the Canadian Pacific Railway (CPR) Section House in Coronation lies in its association with railway divisional point infrastructure, particularly the type of housing provided by the company for certain essential railway employees.

The CPR, like most other railway companies, organized their rail networks by centralizing services and staff at certain points along the line. The town sites selected as divisional points were often situated at important locations or at key junctions and generally rose to become the dominant urban centres of the surrounding region. While most railway employees stationed at divisional points would be provided with bunkhouses or expected to find their own lodging in town, better housing was often provided for certain, higher level employees like Section Foremen and Roadmasters.

For these higher level positions, married men with families were preferred by the company as they were viewed as being more stable and reliable than single men. Consequently, the residences provided for them, known as Section Houses, were designed with adequate room for an average family.

Between 1910 and 1914, the CPR opened a new line from Stettler into Saskatchewan. Approximately 120 kilometres east of Stettler a town site named Coronation was surveyed and selected to be a divisional point. From Coronation, CPR staff managed the line eastward to Kerrobert, Saskatchewan, which was reached by 1914; eventually expanded to cover the Lorraine Subdivision, between Youngstown in the south and Berkinshaw (near Alliance) in the north, as well as a short spur north from Halkirk to the coal mines near Forestburg. In about 1911, soon after the arrival of the CPR at the Coronation town site, three section houses were built, one of which was used by the Section Foreman and later by the Roadmaster.

The CPR section houses were basic and utilitarian in construction, lacking any real ornamentation or unnecessary comfort, which demonstrates the dwelling's institutional nature and the scarce attention paid by the company to aspects of the operation only tangentially related to its primary business operations. The Coronation Section House is similar in design and layout to CPR Standard Plan Section House No. 4, the plans for which are dated 1914. Like other section houses of this era, the Coronation building is a one and one-half story, wood frame building with T-shaped plan and shingle-clad gable ends facing north, south and west. Exterior and interior ornamentation and construction materials are simple and easy to maintain. The exterior was clad in wood siding, which was eventually replaced with low-maintenance, asphalt-based Insulbrick. The interior of the home features a kitchen, dining room and living room on the main floor and three approximately equal-sized bedrooms on the upper floor. A small, square basement is located beneath the kitchen and a crawl space is underneath the rest of the house. Interior detailing is minimal, consisting of basic five-panel doors; single hung, one-over-one sash windows; and plain wooden baseboards, window frames and door frames. The house is situated in a transitional zone between the rail yard and the town site. The front entryway on the north side of the house opens to the roadway and town while the rear entry at the southwest corner, gives easy access to the rail yard, reflecting the building's dual role as a family residence and as a home for a key, local railway employee.

It is therefore considered that the preservation and protection of the resource is in the public interest.

and municipally located in Big Valley, Alberta be designated as a Provincial Historic Resource under section 20 of the Historical Resources Act, RSA 2000 cH-9.

The reasons for the designation are as follows: The heritage value of the Alberta Wheat Pool (AWP) Grain Elevator in Big Valley lies in it being an excellent example of this iconic, but now rare, type of structure. It is also a significant contributor to the cultural landscape of the Village of Big Valley. The elevator, along with other associated structures and features, is evidence of the community's former standing as a major railroading centre.

The AWP grain elevator in Big Valley is a landmark structure in the Village of Big Valley and is representative of hundreds of similar structures that existed in similar communities throughout Alberta. Wood-cribbed elevators such as this were constructed in hundreds of communities across western Canada with many communities boasting rows of multiple elevators. Visible from miles around, the imposing vertical orientation of these structures dominated the flatland of the Prairies. As a central location for the delivery of the grain harvest, elevators became an important meeting place for a region's farmers. As such, they served an essential role in the agricultural, commercial and social life of the communities in which they were located. Starting in the 1980s, consolidation in the grain handling and marketing sector and the development of new construction technologies resulted in the closure and demolition of most wood-cribbed grain elevators. Only a handful of examples still remain.

Built in 1960, Big Valley's AWP grain elevator is a tall, wood-cribbed, gable roofed structure with a gable roofed cupola. The cedar siding-clad elevator sports dominant corporate signage and minimal fenestration. It has an attached driveway, accessible by earthen ramps with concrete retaining walls and large sliding doors. A detached office and an outhouse are located a few metres away. Aside from a few minor differences indicative of its period of construction, such as its relatively short driveway and large storage capacity, the elevator is typical of the many others that formerly existed in similar small town contexts across Alberta.

Selected as a divisional point on the Canadian Northern Railway's (CNoR) Battle River Subdivision line in 1912, Big Valley was the site of a major rail maintenance facility. It had a station, rail yard and turntable with roundhouse as well as several other ancillary railway buildings. By 1921, Big Valley had developed into a bustling town of just over 1,000, including approximately 250 railroad employees. A number of grain companies built elevators in town, the Home Grain Co. (1916), Parrish and Heimbecker (1918), and the United Grain Co. (1920), which was later acquired by the Alberta Wheat Pool (1928). The AWP expanded their facility in 1960 with the construction of the current elevator. Big Valley's prominence was short-lived; a few years after the 1919 merger of the CNoR and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway (GTP), the divisional point and most of the railroad employees were transferred to the GTP divisional point at Mirror.

With its loss of status, Big Valley's population dropped dramatically during the late-1920s and over time most of the buildings and features associated with the railroad disappeared. In 1997, the rails south of town were removed. In the same year, the elevator was decommissioned and, in 1998, sold to a historical society. However, the village's grid pattern layout, the evidence of the rail yards and lines, historic locomotives that still stop at the town and the presence of structures such as the roundhouse remains and the station building comprise a cultural landscape that still communicates Big Valley's railroading past. The AWP grain elevator dominates the townsite and, though it was constructed much later than the other elements, its connection with the railway's role in grain transportation makes it a significant contributory element to the village's cultural landscape.

It is therefore considered that the preservation and protection of the resource is in the public interest.

Errata

The document entitled “CODE OF PRACTICE FOR A WATERWORKS SYSTEM CONSISTING SOLELY OF A WATER DISTRIBUTION SYSTEM”, printed in the April 30, 2012 edition of the Alberta Gazette, shall be updated as follows:

1. On page 380 of the Gazette, section heading 3.1.4 should be deleted, leaving the subheadings (a) through (d) directly under section heading 3.1.3.

In making this change, other section headings are renumbered as follows:

- heading 3.1.5 becomes 3.1.4;
- heading 3.1.6 becomes 3.1.5;
- headings 3.1.7, 3.1.7.1 and 3.1.7.2 become 3.1.6, 3.1.6.1 and 3.1.6.2 respectively;
- heading 3.1.8 becomes 3.1.7; and
- heading 3.1.9 becomes 3.1.8.

References in the document to sections 3.1.7 and 3.1.7.1 will now refer to sections 3.1.6 and 3.1.6.1 respectively.

2. On page 387 of the Gazette, section 5.1.5(b)(ii), subsections (1) and (2) should read as (A) and (B) respectively.

The printed and PDF versions of this document, available through the Alberta Queen's Printer, have been updated with these 2 revisions.

The document entitled “CODE OF PRACTICE FOR WATERWORKS SYSTEMS USING HIGH QUALITY GROUNDWATER”, printed in the April 30, 2012 edition of the Alberta Gazette, should be updated as follows:

1. On page 411 of the Gazette, in the last row of the Limit column, the words “daily” and “monthly” have been transposed. The text should read: “The optimum concentration specified in GCDWQ with monthly variation of +/- 0.1 mg/L and daily average variation of +/- 0.2 mg/L”
2. On page 413 of the Gazette, section heading 5.1.3.7 should be deleted, leaving the subheadings (a) and (b) directly underneath section heading 5.1.3.6.

In making this change, other section headings are renumbered as follows:

- heading 5.1.3.8 becomes 5.1.3.7; and
- heading 5.1.3.9 becomes 5.1.3.8.

3. On page 421 of the Gazette, section 5.1.7(b), the subheadings i. and ii. should read as (i) and (ii) respectively.

The printed and PDF versions of this document, available through the Alberta Queen's Printer, have been updated with these 3 revisions.
