Culture and Status of Women

Notice of Intention to Designate a Provincial Historic Resource

(Historical Resources Act)

File: Des. 2306

Notice is hereby given that no less than sixty days from the date of service of this Notice and its publication in the Alberta Gazette, the Minister of Culture intends to make an Order that the site known as the:

Blairmore Bandstand together with the land legally described as:

Plan 0813536
Block 1
Lot 4
excepting thereout all mines and minerals and municipally located in the Crowsnest Pass, Alberta be designated as a Provincial Historic Resource under Section 20 of the Historical Resources Act, RSA 2000 cH-9.

The reasons for the designation are as follows: The Blairmore Bandstand has heritage value as an excellent example of a once common structure in many Alberta communities. It is also significant due to its close and symbolic association with the Crowsnest Pass labour movement.

Bandstands became popular in the Victorian Age, when they were associated with social movements aiming to improve urban conditions. Civic parks and green spaces were central to these movements as they were accessible to all people regardless of social class or financial situation. Performing arts, particularly brass bands, were also seen as having moral and therapeutic benefits, and many communities and organizations established amateur bands. Competent brass bands were seen as essential to a community's image, and they were featured prominently at parades, outdoor concerts and other civic events. Small structures, typically called bandstands, were erected in many parks as an outdoor venue for performances by these bands. Although there are many variations in design and ornamentation, most traditional bandstands were circular or polygonal in design. An elevated platform with open sides and railings allowed the performers or speakers to be seen and heard by the audience, which could encircle the structure. A roof, usually conical or pyramidal in style, protected the performers from precipitation. Most bandstands were simple wood structures with minimal ornamentation, while those in larger urban areas were often constructed of metal, were elaborately decorated and featured ornate umbrella or domed roofs. By the 1930s, many Alberta communities had at least one bandstand, typically located in a municipal park, near the main street or railway, or on the exhibition grounds. As societal preferences for public entertainment changed, many of these bandstands were either demolished or deteriorated due to neglect. Today, there are few extant remaining examples of Alberta's bandstands.

The Blairmore Bandstand was commissioned by the town council in June 1921 and was completed by mid-July. It is located within Blairmore's main commercial district, in a small park between Victoria Street (20th Avenue) and the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks. The bandstand is a simple wooden structure, built of milled lumber with no significant ornamentation. It has ten sides and a raised, circular platform, which is enclosed by a wooden railing with cross-braces. The cross-brace railing pattern is repeated in the detail at the top of each side, just under the roof. Access to the platform is gained via three wooden steps and a break in the railing at the northern-most side. Interior bench seating is provided by planks attached to the five southern-most sides by wooden brackets. A shingle clad, polygonal roof with exposed rafters and wooden posts covers the bandstand. Decorations, such as flags, bunting and strands of electric lights, can be attached to or draped from the wooden flagpole projecting through the roof peak. Like bandstands in other communities, the Blairmore Bandstand played a prominent role in the town, being used as the site of musical performances, rallies and as either the muster point or the end point for parades and races. However, the significance of the Blairmore Bandstand transcends this common function. The coal mines of the Crowsnest Pass were notoriously dangerous, and the region was a site of significant labour unrest and union activity. The bandstand was used as a site for speeches by strike leaders, union organizers, labour-oriented politicians and communists as well as being a rallying point for demonstrations and marches, notably a May 1932 strike rally at the bandstand that culminated in a significant clash between striking miners and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Due to these momentous events, the Blairmore Bandstand is an iconic symbol of the Crowsnest Pass labour movement and the unrest of the 1930s.

Any person who wishes to make a representation regarding the proposed designation may do so by submitting a written request to the Minister, care of Matthew Wangler, Executive Director, Historic Resources Management Branch, 8820 – 112th Street, Edmonton, Alberta, T6G 2P8. Any such request must be made within 30 days of the publication of this notice. At the end of the 30-day period, the Minister will fix a date for the hearing of representations and will notify all those who have advised of their intention to make representations. On the date fixed, the Minister will hear representations from all parties who have expressed an interest in doing so.

It is therefore considered that the preservation and protection of the resource is in the public interest.

Dated this 5th day of October, 2022.
